

Dollar Death Survival:

Practical Insights into Surviving the Death of the Dollar
(BEWARE OF 2/22/2010)

Did you ever hear the phrase “A picture is worth a thousand words?” The above picture by Deesillustrations.com definitely is worth a thousand words, which can be summed up in two words “Dollar Death.” Do you know that history tells us that all fiat currencies will eventually die? See a fiat currency is a currency based on nothing. When you base a currency on nothing it will eventually be worth the same. The dollar is a fiat currency essentially based on nothing therefore it will one day be worth the same—nothing! The Dollar will one day die. Here is an eye opener; I believe that it is highly possible that the death of the dollar will occur or begin to occur on 2/22/2010. There are many reasons why I see this as a distinct possibility. First; it is the date ciphered on the dollar bill that I believe is related to the destruction of the United States as a sovereign nation. See, “the powers to be” must destroy the sovereignty of the United States, and every other nation for that matter, to bring about their new world order which is approaching fast. In other words, it was planned from the beginning; America was born to die and 2/22/2010 could be the date. Thirdly there are many economists such as Gerald Celente and the Greater European Anticipation Bulletin that are predicting that dire financial straits are just around the corner. There are also articles pointing out such things as “US Avoids Technical Default By Three Days” and that the biggest bond dealer in the world plans on dumping U.S. Treasury notes. And there is also the latest linguistics report from Clif High at halfpasthan.com which predicts the death of the dollar by the vernal equinox (3/21/2010) but most likely in February 2010. I believe that his report is worth the $10 and helps give a feel for the scope and timing of events that Bible prophecy says will occur. Here are a few excerpts from the latest report

The [decay] set is specifically focused on the [decay(of the) planetary markets] that will [follow on] or [accompany] the [dollar death]. The [decay] is indicated to become [glaringly visible] over January and February with a significant point of [internal disruption] being reached by the vernal equinox in March. P.10

Once this [secrets revealed] phase of [currency control] begins to manifest (in late Winter 2010, most probably after February 11th), the data sets are all gathering under descriptor of [breach in the dam]). This area is in direct support chain for the [usofa dollar] and is pointing to the [pulling of the trigger] event(s) which will create the [dollar death] conditions that will be so [shocking] to the [populace]. P. 14

The [areas of contention] that will be forming the background of the [chaos] in all parts of the [anglosphere] from late winter 2009/2010 (perhaps mid February?) will stem first from the [dollar death (markets and currencies collapse pretty much globally)], followed by the [military (and militarized law enforcement)] response to the [global financial panic riots]. P.34

Again based on the factors above I believe that it is highly possible that the date of the beginning of the dollar death will be 2/22/2010, I could be wrong but that is my thinking at this time. (Note: As stated in the article "The Dollar Code" linked above 3/22/2010 and 2/22/2011 are also possibilities.)

What might a dollar death look like? Below is an excerpt of a fictional account of what might happen when the dollar dies; Note the date that this author has chosen for the collapse.

THE DAY THE DOLLAR DIED

The following story in italics is a potential fictional time line for the day the dollar died. I hope not to instill fear or loathing but to give everyone some perspective on a POSSIBLE outcome which does not really take much of a reach to come to any conclusion. Despite popular belief and promises from those who wish to rob you of your savings and investments, the collapse of the dollar might just be an event measured in hours, not days as their control is not what it seems.....

Mike was less than an hour from home in Minnesota after dropping his load off in Fargo but knew he needed to top his tank off this Sunday evening to insure his rig would make it home. He pulled into the Petro Truck Stop just outside of Fargo and hopped out of the cab into the bitter twenty below temperatures which he could not believe had already hit at ten o'clock at night. He slid his fuel card into the pump waiting for the next prompt when the "SEE ATTENDANT" message flashed in the screen. He blustered, figured it was another card problem and whipped out his Master Card and slid it in after the pump reset and again the "SEE ATTENDANT" message flashed up. "What the hell is going on?" he thought to himself as he wandered into the long line of drivers boisterously yelling at managers and clerks alike.

Tom finished up his shift on the docks at the Nestle warehouse in Hampton, Georgia at exactly 11 o'clock at night and decided that because of the scuttlebutt he had been reading on the message boards, it may not be a bad idea to pick up a few cans of food and some toilet paper at the local WalMart Super center. Even though it was a Sunday night, they were always stocked and it was just five minutes out of the way to his home. As he walked inside the store, his mouth dropped. It looked like the day after Thanksgiving sale with every register open and ten plus people deep at 11:30 p.m. "Oh my God!" he gasped as he walked in grabbing the last shopping cart with the wheel that was half locked up. As he walked as fast as he could to the aisle with the paper goods, he looked at all the shelves then noticed the clerk who looked stunned himself. "How in the SAM HELL does WalMart sell out of Toilet Paper son?" he screamed at the eighteen year old kid. "Sir, I don't know what is going on. Is the world ending? I'm a little freaked out!" the clerk stammered. Tom realized that he was not to blame and as he calmed down said to the kid "Son, I don't know what is going on either. It must be an ice storm on the way. Are you folks getting another truck soon?" The clerk said in a very low voice "Sir, I think there are two coming at 2 a.m. I would wait here if I were you." With that information Tom slinked outside to his car and called his wife at home just before midnight to tell her he would be staying to wait on the WalMart trucks.

1730 ET...February 21, 2010

It was a typical Sunday night in my household, a tremendous dinner, nice weather in Florida and of course a chance to chat with my friends online about the events of the world. The big news was that on Friday, February 19, 2010 the US Dollar Index closed at 69.07 far below any level in history and of course shattering all known technical support. As I grabbed a glass of Port and settled in front of my computer at 5 p.m. Eastern to watch the Asian fireworks and watch Bloomberg and CNBC-Asia on my computer, I noticed the Middle Eastern markets closed in horrid shape. The Israeli market closed three hours after the open and down 22% for the session. The Saudi markets closed after one hour and down 41%. Other regional markets did not open or were shut down due to national emergency declarations. As I tuned in expecting the usual repeat on Bloomberg, it was live with a somewhat excited news babe reading information from a blog reporting "rumors" that the CEO's of Citigroup and Bank of America were in meetings since 11 a.m. with the New York Fed. At that point, it was time to put the port up and break out the hard stuff...

1000 ET (February 22, 2010)

The Canadian markets opened up 10% in ten minutes then rolled over down 31% by 10:30. The scary part was that the Canadian dollar kept on rising even though commodity trading was suspended and everyone was wondering just what gold would be priced at if the markets were allowed to trade.

As the day wore on, it was a blur of shocking story after shocking story. The President and his entourage arrived in Switzerland along with other world leaders but little was discussed or disclosed. The reports of banks being fire bombed by nuts throughout parts of the U.S. made the international news and caused all of us to feel somewhat uncomfortable as to what was next. The 8 p.m. interruption of normal prime time programming with a FEMA NEWS ALERT which lasted ten minutes and was repeated at the top of every hour with little if any information caused even more panic in the masses. Today I watched our dollar die in a matter of hours even though I knew how it was killed months if not years ago. I just wondered how bad the announcement out of Geneva was going to be as our bankers and politicians sold our souls out to save their rear ends.

I also wondered if I would ever sleep again.²

Whether this is the way things play out or not, I do not know. But it gives insights as to the possibilities of what might occur. Am I 100% sure that 2/22/2010 is the day the dollar will die? No; but am I certain that one day the dollar will die? Yes, all fiat currencies have. So the question this article seeks to answer is what to do to prepare for the inevitable crash whenever it occurs. I am not a financial adviser and none of this is to be taken as financial advice but I will share with you my financial strategy of what I am doing to survive the eventual death of the dollar and its possible ramifications.

GOLD, GOLD, and more GOLD! (Note: I am not a part of the gold industry) I am trying to accumulate as much gold as possible in my physical possession. Why? Gold keeps its value vs. inflation and gold will most likely increase in value during a currency collapse because of increased demand. In fact the Global European Anticipation Bulletin predicts a demand increase in gold due to collapsing currencies in 2010.

At the same time, the general context of the bankruptcy of an increasing number of states and other authorities (regions, provinces, federal states) will entail a double paradoxical event of increasing interest rates and the flight out of currencies towards gold. In the absence of an organised alternative to a weakening US Dollar and in order to find an alternative to the loss in value of treasury bonds (in particular US ones) all central banks will have, in part, to « reconvert to gold », the old enemy of the US Federal Reserve, without being able to state the fact official³

I have seen estimates that put Gold during a currency collapse at $6000 an ounce and more. Another factor to consider regarding gold is that the gold price has been artificially suppressed and the lid is getting ready to be blown off the whole gold suppression scandal and when that happens, look out, gold will sky rocket. So these factors will be positive for the gold price. Therefore I want to own gold for the mere fact that it preserves my wealth and possibly may increase my wealth.

Now what kind of gold do I want to own? “Numismatic” coins and Chinese coins. Why? Because gold was confiscated in the past and I believe that in a crisis they will do it again! And I will explain below why these types of gold MAY not be confiscatable. But first here is how I see it playing out if confiscation occurs; they will first probably make it illegal to own gold bullion and require all citizens to turn in their gold bullion under penalty of fine or imprisonment, just like they did in 1933. Then they will probably send the military to retrieve all the gold out of the large private holding facilities, and will order the banks, which were previously shut down, to go through all the safety deposit boxes and turn in all the gold found there.

Some have told me that they would not turn in their gold because the government would be performing an illegal action against them. But if ownership of gold were made illegal and you kept it, what good would it be? Stores could not legally accept it. It could only be used for barter with individuals and you would be risking fine or imprisonment. Personally I would rather avoid that conflict and own non-confiscateable gold, if there is such a thing.

I believe that there MAY be 2 forms of non-confiscateable gold; Numismatic coins and Chinese coins. The first time they confiscated gold they made an exception for numismatic coins and if they confiscate it again they may make the same exception. What does the treasury define as a numismatic coin? The most recent treasury document regarding the definition of numismatic has defined numismatic gold as coins that are at least worth two times their bullion value. In other words if a one ounce gold coin was worth $1500 when gold was at $1000 per ounce then it would be considered as bullion. The coin would have to be worth $2000 or more to be defined as numismatic. Thus if they confiscate gold and make an exception for numismatic coins, as they did the first time around, and use this definition then a coin having a numismatic value worth twice its melt value is the type I want to own. BTW some think the same goes for silver too.

The other loophole may be Chinese gold coins. They MAY not be subject to confiscation because they are an actual foreign currency. Read what this author has to say about this.

This is being caused by a tiny quirk in the law, wherein the U.S. Treasury cannot call in for redemption, forced or otherwise, gold bullion coins held by U.S. citizens which are denominated, marginally or otherwise, in a foreign currency which is not "Free to Trade" and as such constitutes a "non-convertible currency" by the Bank of International Settlement (BIS). This, in turn, makes the Chinese Gold Bullion Panda Coins, which are issued by the Bank of China, the only officially authorized issued gold bullion coin of a major foreign government, exempt from U.S. Treasury redemption. Why? Because, Chinese Panda coins are denominated in the Yuan, China's official currency, which is a non-convertible currency, in accordance with BIS's definition.⁴

So to preserve my wealth and possibly create some I am seeking to acquire as much Chinese gold coins and numismatic coins (and silver) as possible.

Another strategy I am using to preserve wealth and possibly increase it is by purchasing precious metal stocks. I believe that in a currency crash gold mining companies would rise in value. There are many gold mining stocks and funds out there. I like GDX it is a conglomeration of some of the best gold mines in the world. Again none of this is to be considered as financial advice I am just sharing my financial strategy to survive the dollar death.

Other factors to consider in surviving the death of the dollar, which I will not elaborate on in this article are;

1. Water—get a water filter
2. Food—freeze dried foods
3. Shelter—alternative heat source
4. Protection—shotgun and ammo/ a safe to store valuables
5. Cash—have some on hand

You can read Pastor Chuck Baldwin's newsletter entitled "A Suggested Survival List" for a further discussion on that topic.

In closing; Prov 22:3 says "A prudent [man] foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished." I know that the dollar will one day collapse and I believe this will most likely occur or begin to occur on 2/22/2010. I could be wrong but that is my thinking at this time. In light of the possible scenarios and ramifications of the coming death of the dollar, whenever it happens, I have come up with the above strategy to financially survive that time as much as possible. I am sharing my strategy with you in case it might help you. Again none of this is to be considered as financial advice.
